

The tour starts at the Warwick Avenue Station and finishes at Camden Market.

Click here for a larger interactive map.

Note: Keep in mind that sometimes certain sections of the towpath along the canal are closed due to weather or construction. Continue to walk along the sidewalk above the canal until you find where the towpath opens up again, and then take the stairs down so you can continue your stroll along the water.

(A) Little Venice: Walk southeast along Warwick Avenue towards Little Venice. The canal intersects with Warwick Avenue and so you should see the canal running below the road on your left and right. Start by turning right and walking on the sidewalk until you come to the stairs leading down to the towpath. Walk down to the towpath and around this circular bit of Little Venice to see some of the most famous boats in the area. There are many businesses that operate out of canal boats such as the Floating Boater Cafe, Waterside Cafe, or the Puppet Theatre Barge!

(B) Rembrandt Gardens: Adjacent to Little Venice is the Rembrandt Gardens, formerly named Warwick Gardens. The name of the ornamental garden was changed to celebrate the donation of 5,000 tulips and 500 hyacinths to mark the 700th birthday of the City of Amsterdam. If you fancy a quick walk around, head back up to the sidewalk to have a look before continuing down along the towpath.

(C) The heart of Little Venice: The stretch of the canal located on the other side of Warwick Street is the most famous bit of Little Venice. As each boat is someone's home, they vary immensely in terms of colour and style.

(D) Cafe LaVille: Continue east along the canal towards Regent's Park. If you're in need of a drink or snack, pop into this small cafe which has beautiful views of the canal as it is located directly above the water.

(D) Green walkway: The stretch of the canal after Cafe LaVille is also very idyllic. Several colourful boats are moored along the path, and the walkway itself is shrouded in greenery as many of the permanent boat residents have converted the area into a lengthy garden.

(E) Regent's Park: As you progress onward, you will see large mansions on your right. Just beyond them is Regent's Park -- a massive park that is worth exploring if you have the time. There are a merry-go-round and other fun playground toys for children.

Circumnavigate the entirety of the park to end up back along the canal. Keep in mind that a stroll around Regent's Park will likely add an additional hour to your walk.

(F) Primrose Hill: On the opposite side of the canal is Primrose Hill, which offers some of the best views of London. Wander to the top for some photo ops, and then continue back down on the canal. Though this is also a slight detour, Primrose Hill is much more easily accessible from the towpath than Regent's Park

(G) ZSL London Zoo: Also located along the canal is the London Zoo. For serious animal lovers, a stop at the zoo might be necessary. However, those less keen on leaving the canal will be happy to find that a few of the exhibits are located directly along the canal and can, therefore, be easily enjoyed from the path.

(H) Feng Shang Princess: A novelty dining experience, Feng Shang Princess is a giant pagoda-style canal boat that comes complete with Chinese dragons and a bright red paint job. Reviews seem generally positive, though the uniqueness of the dining experience is possibly its greatest appeal.

(I) Canal art: In addition to the beautiful foliage, the canal also features some interesting art. Keep your eyes out for eclectic pieces, especially as you venture nearer to Camden.

(J) Camden Market: Finish your walk at Camden Market, which is a must-see destination for all visitors to London. There are many stalls selling food, clothing, bric-a-brac, and interesting crafts. The area is also known for its music scene and cool pubs.

